TECHNOLOGY AND SOCIETY
Z & K Z D d d 2023

MODULE DESCRIPTION

Through history, technology and society have moved forward hand in hand. As society determines needs and wants, technological innovations and inventions are developed to meet them. Conversely, technological developments may create new needs and wants. Technology impacts politics, culture, economies, and the environment in ways that may require that technological developments be constrained or controlled by society.

Historically, technological developments had widespread impacts that changed our society. As an example, prior to the invention of the telegraph, news and information traveled only as fast as a horse on land or a boat on water. The invention of the telegraph was beginning of a long chain of communications technologies through the telephone, radio, television, and cellular technologies that allow us to communicate and access information from anywhere in the world on a device that fits in our pocket. Each of these technological developments have driven new and divergent technologies and created new needs and wants. New societal issues have been created with respect to information access, privacy, and identity that were very different in the past. Further, the development of better measurement capabilities from information technology (v)7
